EDUCAT (Empowerment of Disabled people through the User-Coproductio of Assistive Technology) is a European funded project to develop and deliver adaptive, open and modular technology to promote independence and improve quality of life for people with motor impairment and neurological disorders.

What is new about it?

The project aims to promote a user-centred assistive technology design using co-design methods involving service users, engineers, clinicians, researchers, user-support networks and companies. A key element of the project is to incorporate monitoring of equipment usage patterns. The expected benefits are cost and time savings for companies (for developing technologies) and hospitals (for care) as well as a higher efficiency of use of the technology.

The project is a cooperation between Belgian, French and English partners and is supported by the Interreg 2 Seas Program 2014-2020.
